AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

The second major reason for the income differences is that farm people generally have less education than do nonfarm people and are able to earn less at nonfarm jobs. The difference in education is of long standing and is found in all countries, developed and undeveloped; it also exists whether the national education system is highly decentralized, as in the United States, or highly centralized, as in France.

Agricultural economics - Land, output, and yields | Britannica

James A. Roumasset, in Sustainable Economic Development, 2015. 2.2 Behavioral Foundations for Agricultural Development Policy. For the last half century, the study of agricultural development has been overwhelmingly devoted to the problem of how, in Arthur Moshier's (1966) parlance, to get agriculture moving. As such, agricultural development is best seen as a problem of public
