Emotion And The Structure Of

On the contrary, emotions are structured in several ways: by their underlying neurology, by the judgments and evaluations that enter into them, by the behaviour that expresses or manifests them, and by the larger social contexts in which they occur. Thus, one might say that an emotion is an "integrated neuro-physiological-behavioral-evaluative-experiential-social phenomenon."

Emotion - The structure of emotions | Britannica

The social structures of emotion consist of the ways in which the larger social context determines an emotion's causes, content, modes of expression, and meaning. Even the basic emotions, which are generally assumed to have a neurological core, are shaped to a large extent by social factors. Read More on This Topic
