Flowers from the Storm is a long-time favourite romance of mine. It's heartfelt and deeply romantic while not being an easy read, but is filled with beautiful prose and imagery. The hero, Christian, Duke of Jervalux begins the book as your typical alpha-male; a wealthy man-about-town who can (and does) have any woman he wants.

It's also the story of rebuilding from the ruins, of finding the flowers that the fiercest storm can't blow away, and making a gift of them to one's beloved. Together, Maddy and Christian collect what they can in the wake of his... "illness" is such an inadequate word for the cataclysm that his stroke represents.

Flowers from the Storm offered me an alarming and disturbing look at how the mentally ill were treated, yet it also offered me hope that perhaps someday someone could love me and see past the illness into the sanity and sincerity within my heart. Passion and love, I began to think, were possible for me.

Nicholas Boulton is a master narrator and I imagine Flowers from the Storm was a vocal workout. It has a large cast of characters and Jervaulx's speech changes depending upon his state of health. But if it was difficult for Mr. Boulton, the listener would never know. The listening experience was easy and delicious.
