manifests itself once the chicken completes adult plumage. The difference between fast normal feather development and delayed-feathering can be recognized in one-day-old chicks but is always more evident in 10- to 12-day-old chicks. Female chicks have a slightly faster feathering than males. Barely seen in breeds with

No other (living) animals have them. The qualifier is required because feathers have now been found in fossil imprints of some dinosaurs and related reptiles. Like hair on mammals and scales on reptiles, feathers are part of the integument (skin). All are largely composed of keratin, which is also the main ingredient of human nails, animal claws, and the scales on the legs and feet of birds.

As a beginner, it will be easiest to work with a worsted weight yarn, which is labeled #4 on the yarn label. This is a good medium-weight yarn. A "3" (DK weight) is also acceptable but might be too thin for some newbies. And a "5" (bulky weight) works well, too, but again may not be as easy as the worsted weight yarn.

If you have a young grey, do not have its wing feather trimmed just yet. Wait until it has started to learn to fly (i.e. when it can take off and land smoothly and do basic maneuvers, such as turning and landing at its destination). Once your African grey is proficient at basic flight, consider a light wing-feather trim.
