Economics and Education

Economics is the study of how humans make decisions in the face of scarcity. These can be individual decisions, family decisions, business decisions or societal decisions. If you look around carefully, you will see that scarcity is a fact of life. Scarcity means that human wants for goods, services and resources exceed what is available.

The fundamental principles of economics apply to health care just as to other sectors of the economy. [1,2] David Eddy illustrates this point: "If health interventions were offered for free, if people had infinite incomes, if programs such as Medicaid had unlimited budgets, the design of a practice policy could stop with the comparison of benefits and harms; every intervention for which the benefits outweighed the harms should be recommended and performed.
