Sarah Starzynski was a blood Jew, which means that she was Jewish by blood. Neither her or her family were religious. Sarah was born and raised in Paris, and considered herself as a French girl, as did her parents. But the Nazis didn't care about her ethnicity, and because she was a descendant of Jews, she was taken away.

Indifference and Denial. Sarah's Key illustrates that indifference and denial, two seemingly passive ways of responding to ugly, dangerous, or traumatic events, can both be horribly destructive. From the opening pages of the novel, many characters respond to the treatment of the Jews in France with complete indifference, or they watch and do nothing.
