The Emigrants Wg Sebald

The Emigrants (German: Die Ausgewanderten) is a 1992 collection of narratives by the German writer W. G. Sebald. It won the Berlin Literature Prize, the Literatur Nord Prize, and the Johannes Bobrowski Medal. The English translation by Michael Hulse was first published in 1996.

The Emigrants (Sebald novel) - Wikipedia

"The Emigrants" contains four cameos of Jews who left Germany during the thirties; two commit suicide, one dies under sedation in Ithaca, New York and the last one's demise goes unmentioned. Sebald's modernist story telling is the literary equivalent of the paintings of George Braque with the Germanic accent of Ernest Ludwig Kirchner or Emil Nolde; colorful, elliptical, disguised.

In “The Emigrants”, W. G. Sebald traced the lives of four German emigrants who each lived an inevitable exile of sorts. The English translation by Michael Hulse was very good and lyrical, even luscious.

The Emigrants by W.G. Sebald

As with his books The Rings of Saturn and Vertigo, W.G. Sebald’s The Emigrants is almost impossible to describe, let alone categorise. Sebald invented a strange, dream-like literary genre of his own: an odd mix of reportage, memoir and fiction. Or at least I think that’s the mix: it’s frankly impossible to tell which passages are factual and which invented.
